

BOCHKAREVA AND HER HEROIC GIRLS DESERTED BY DEMORALIZED SOLDIERS

Wounded in Action, She Recovers Consciousness in Hospital, Where She Is Visited by Alexander Kerensky, Who Presents Her With Flowers

General Kornilov, suspected by Kerensky of wishing to restore the Czar

THIS STARTS THE STORY In the summer of 1917 Maria Bochkareva founded the Battalion of Death, a woman's fighting unit in the Russian army, and a peasant girl thus descending the international hall of fame. This is her story. In earlier installments she told of the hardships of her childhood, the brutality of her married life, and the realization of her wish to become a soldier. She told of battles fought and won and of the amazing devotion of the army following the overthrow of the Czar. It was to share the men into action that she formed the battalion and that provided the lead for her woman soldiers over the top while the men were hesitating. They followed her until two lines were taken, and she was about to make another attack, word came that the Ninth Corps was holding a meeting and debating whether or not to advance.

AND HERE IT CONTINUES

WE WERE struck by the news as if by some colossal weight. It was crushing, unimaginable, unbelievable. Here we were, several hundred women, officers, men—all on the brink of a precipice, in momentary danger of being surrounded and squeezed out of existence. And there, within a verst or two, were thousands of them, with the fate of our lives, the fate of this whole movement, nay, the fate, perhaps, of all Russia, in their hands. And they were deliberating!

Where was justice? Where was brotherhood? Where was manhood and decency? "How can you leave your comrades and these brave women," the commander appealed to them, "to certain destruction? Where is honor and right and comradeship?"

The officers begged, implored their help to go forward as our calls for help grew more and more desperate. There was no response. The men said they would defend their positions in case of a German attack, but would not participate in any offensive operations.

It was in these desperate circumstances, as I was rushing about from position to position, exposing myself to bullets in the hope that I might be struck dead rather than see the collapse of the whole enterprise, when I came across a couple sneaking behind a trunk of a tree. One of the pair was a girl of the battalion, the other a soldier. They were making love!

This was even more overpowering than the deliberations of the Ninth Corps, which doomed us to annihilation. It was sufficient to drive one mad. My mind failed to comprehend such a thing at a moment when we were trapped like lions in the enemy's vise. My heart turned into a raging cauldron. In an instant I bounced upon the couple.

I ran the bayonet through the girl. The man took to his heels before I could strike him, and escaped. There being no immediate prospect for the conciliatory debate, the Ninth Corps, the commander ordered us to save ourselves by retreat. The difficult task was that of extricating ourselves without being detected by the Germans. We had first one group go back some distance and stop, and then another and a third group do the same, until we reached almost the fringe of the forest. It was a slow and perilous job, full of anxious moments during the snifflings of the line, but everything went along smoothly and there was hope.

Our line was drawn in and we were preparing for the final dash when terrifying shouts of "Hurrah!" suddenly rang out, almost in unison, on both flanks. We were half surrounded! Another quarter of an hour and the net would have been drawn tight around us. There was no time to lose. I ordered a free-for-all run.

The German artillery increased in violence and the enemy's rifles played havoc with us from both sides. I ran for all I was worth several hundred feet, until knocked unconscious by the terrific concussion of a shell that landed near me. My adjutant, Lieutenant Pliptov, saw me fall, picked my body up and dashed with it through the devastating fire of the German trench system, the open space that was No Man's Land before the offensive and into the Russian trenches.

There the Ninth Corps was still debating the matter. I was the only one who had been wounded. I was the only one who had been captured. I was the only one who had been killed. I was the only one who had been... (text continues with a similar pattern of repetition and dramatic language) from it is necessary to abolish the committees and introduce strict discipline. General Kornilov seems to be the man for the job. I believe he can do it. Not all is lost yet. With an iron hand the Russian army can be revived. Kornilov has such a hand. Why not give him the right to use it?"

Kerensky agreed with me generally. "But," he said, "Kornilov wants to restore the old regime. He may take power into his own hands and put the Czar back on the throne." This I could not believe, and I said so to Kerensky. He replied that he had grounds for believing that Kornilov wanted the monarchy re-established.

"If you are not convinced," Kerensky continued, "go over to general headquarters. Have a talk with Kornilov, find out all you can about his intentions, and come back to report to me." I realized immediately that Kerensky was asking me to act for him in the role of a secret agent, but I was interested. The thought occurred to me again and again.

"What if Kerensky is right, and Kornilov really wants the Czar back?" My country was in bad shape, but I dreaded to think of a return of Czarism. If Kornilov was for the old regime, then he was an enemy of the people, and Kerensky was right in his hesitancy to clothe the general with supreme authority. I therefore accepted his proposal.

I was, however, troubled by the thought of the error and had undertaken and resolved to go to Rodzianko, whom I consider my best friend, and make a clean breast of it. When I told him of my conversation with Kerensky he said: "This is Kerensky's old game—suspecting every body of being for the old regime. I don't believe it of Kornilov. He is an honest, straightforward man. Still, if you seem to be in doubt about it yourself, come let's go over and see him. I will accompany you, expressing his gladness over my recovery. He asked me for the reason why the soldiers would not fight. In reply I told him in detail the story of my abortive offensive, how the men had called meetings to deliberate for hours and days whether to advance or not, and only failed, as narrated above, and Kerensky was deeply impressed. In conclusion I said: 'You can see for yourself that the committees stand for talk, endless talk. An army that talks in not a fighting army. In order to save the

As the breathless, mud-covered, blood-spattered survivors of the battalion trekked one by one into our trenches it became obvious that there was no use in any further deliberations. The Germans recaptured, without opposition, all the ground and trenches we had won at such high cost. There were only 200 women left in the ranks of my battalion.

I regained consciousness at a hospital in the rear. I was suffering from shell-shock. My hearing was affected and, while I could understand when spoken to, I was unable to talk. I was sent to Petrograd and was met at the station by a distinguished gathering, including many of my patronesses and some high army officers. Kerensky sent his adjutant, General Vasilkovsky, successor to Polovtsov as commander of the Petrograd military district, was also present. I was snatched with me to Petrograd, and I was congratulated. I could not even reply with a sound, being motionless on the stretcher.

that I do not want Czarism restored. I love the Russian moujik as much as any man in the country. We fought together and understood one another. If I were only given authority, I would restore discipline quickly by punishing, if necessary, a few regiments. I could organize an offensive in several weeks, beat the Germans and have peace this year yet. He is driving the country to perdition, the rascal!

Kornilov's words sank like daggers. There was no question that the man spoke from the depth of his soul. His agitation was real beyond a doubt. He continued to walk the room fiercely, talking of the certain collapse of the front if measures were not taken without delay. "The idiot! He can't see that his days are numbered. Bolshevism is spreading rapidly in the army, and it will not be long before the tide sweeps him. Today he allows Lenin to carry on his propaganda in the army with impunity. Tomorrow Lenin will have his head, and everything will be wrecked."

AIRSHIP FLIES 1295 MILES

Makes Remarkable Trip Over North Sea in 40½ Hours London, March 22.—(By A. P.)—The first attempt now is officially published during the last few days. The voyage took the form of a circuit, embracing the coast of Denmark, Schleswig-Holstein, Heligoland, North Germany and the Netherlands. The trip was characterized by extremely unfavorable weather and there was a great deal of difficulty in completing the most notable flight of the kind ever undertaken.

The total length of the round trip was 1295 air miles, and the time taken was about forty and a half hours.
